THE CHURCH STOVE

n Incident of the "Good Old Times" When It was Regarded as a Sin to Wor-ship in Comfort.

Pittsburgh Times: The famous box Pittsburgh Times: The famous box stove which was the cause of the celebrated quarrel in the church of Rev. Lyman Beecher, father of Henry Ward Reecher, at Litchield, Conn., has just been found and is considered a value of this stove in the church, to warm the congregation during the services, was considered a dangerous and heretical innovation at the time, and raised a disturbance that for a time threatened to disrupt the organization. Up to that time the congregation at Litchield as well as the majority of all the congregations throughout the country worshipped in the cold and soorned the lefe of employing artificial heat to add to the comfort of the body while engaged in praising the Lord and listening to the teaching of His word. After a great deal of discussion the more progressive members of the congregation triumphed, and the stove was put in place. Its opponents considered it a godless proceeding, and were abundantly able to prove, according to their construction of the Scriptures, that the Old and New Testaments were both against it, and challenged the stove party to produce anything from Moses, the prophets or the evangelists, that commanded or even permitted stoves or fre in the house of God.

It is inconceivable to us how such a pother should have been raised over a matter of that sort, and it will probably be a surprise to a good many people that there was ever a time when there was no artificial heat in churches, in winter time, and when people took their religious teaching in a cold storage room. But there are those still living who can remember when such what year the innovation of artificial heat in the wheeleness which was attributed to those who thought that the devil should not have all the fire, and that it might be possible to be plous and reverent, and God-fearing without freezing. The incident serves to call attention to the great changes that stove which was the cause of the celequarrel in the church of Rev.

them were sinful luxuries. If there were no stoves in the churches there were few in the houses of the congregation. If the church was plain and unadorned so were the habitations of the worshippers. We have read a good deal in peetry and in fletion about the family fireside and the domestic hearth stone. At that day they had these institutions in all of their primitive and poetle simplicity. Now all the poetry of the fireside and hearthstone is gone from our homes, and we have the restored.

some people would have us helieve they would be glad to have return, contending that, though we may be more comfortable now and possessed of thousands of conveniences that were then unknown, people were vasily better then than now. In fact the impression is attempted to be created that there was no wickedness at all in those good old days. There is no denying that some of the people were awfully good in some things; they were in fast so upright that they learned backward. But in spile of all this, at he very time when their character for goodness and severe plety was at its height these people of Conneclicut ad a reputation, which still clings to hem, for the sharpest of sharp practices, so much so: blees, so much so that it was scarcely decemed safe for inhabitants of the rest of the country to deal with them. They were not only enormous consumers of rum, but they carried on a great trade selling the fiery stuff to the heathen for whose souls they dally prayed with the greatest unction. On the whole, though they may have possessed some virtues in which we are deficient we have no cause to regret that the good old days have passed never to return.
